World acclaimed vocalist and performer Leandra Ramm to release her upcoming book, “Stalking a Diva,” in which Ramm describes her international cyber stalking ordeal, the startling truth behind law enforcement’s inability to protect her, and her eventual victory despite seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

Singer and performer Leandra Ramm is co-authoring a tell-all book with privacy rights lawyer “D. Rocca,” revealing the shocking truth behind her terrifying cyber stalking ordeal, lasting over 6 agonizing years. The frightening story began when a man posing as the director of the Singapore Music Festival contacted Leandra to discuss booking her for a performance. Once he began to reveal his true intentions, Leandra realized that he was a fraud, and he began taunting, threatening, and stalking her as his sexual obsession grew. Through determination and perseverance, she was able to fight back and eventually end all contact with and from the stalker.

Leandra experienced the most tumultuous and difficult time of her life while her cyber stalker, Colin Mak, unleashed terrorist tactics from the other side of the world. To Leandra, it seemed as if he was outside her doorstep. She contacted the N.Y.P.D., the F.B.I., the U.N., and other government agencies, and none were able to provide protection or to put a stop to the cyber stalking, as there are currently no international treaties in place to prevent cyber stalking. For 6 long years, Leandra fought against the stalker who, from Singapore, did everything within his power to shatter her reputation, diminish her credibility, and ruin her life via the Internet,

Through Colin’s cyber-terrorism, thousands of death threats, slanderous blogs, and his overall terrifying obsession with her, Leandra continued to fight for herself, her family, and her friends. Everything changed when she began working with A.J. Fardella, an expert in cyber crime and digital forensics. One month after retaining Fardella, Leandra saw her 6-year ordeal end with the arrest of her stalker in Singapore. Since her hard-won victory, Leandra has become an activist that supports establishing international law enforcement treaties to protect people from going through the same terrifying experience that she endured. By sharing her story, she hopes to bring more attention to the problem of preparing our local, state, and federal law enforcement with tools, training and mutual law enforcement treaties so that these agencies can step in and protect people in a similar situation.

To be featured on the Lifetime Network’s new series “My Life is a Lifetime Movie” on November 28th 2012 and in her upcoming book, “Stalking a Diva,” Leandra aims to shed light on the chilling reality of cyber-stalking that many people face. By bringing awareness to this subject, she hopes that more people will be spared the anguish of this growing threat.

Leandra Ramm is available for interviews, either live or for print media about her book, 'Stalking A Diva' and related episode of "My Life Is A Lifetime Movie," on November 28th 2012. Mr. Fardella is also available as an expert in the "Stalking a Diva" case.

Dear Leandra (Leandra's parents David and Adrienne Ramm take note) Unless I get an apology via email from you, and all offensive material is taken down. (I head to NYC next week)

(you called me a money scammer----- when I was the one who pumped in thousands of dollars to get contacts for you and your emergency cash when requested all in 24 hours)

I would want COURTNEY RAMM your little sister to be raped and beaten and your autistic brother LOGAN RAMM to suffer the same fate. I know autistic people have very very low IQ hence his self---defence capabilities are non---existent. Courtney Ramm works at YogaWorks in NYC.

I know where to find her. You love them enough to know that they should NOT be suffering the results of your sins against me yes? I have very little regard for autistic people and people who lack loyalty and integrity.

I am on the same ship as you now. You owe me a meeting on this ship because you asked me to buy tickets for it, yet I am treated harshly and unjustly. Why you choose to act like this I do not know. You promised there would be no incidents on this ship and you would meet me and we would have a good time on the ship. I have been here for 2 weeks and nothing of that sort has happened. I have spent 17 000 USD already on this ship trip which I did not need to have in the first place. Add this to the fact that I have sponsored you before and did you plenty of financial favors and made contacts for you.

In fact you have been ignoring my emails. I am beginning to lose complete trust in you and as you can imagine I am boiling with rage. Why is this? Are you such an ingrate, a b****h, a complete c**t and a degenerate punk or a beautiful, kind pleasant girl that I have always thought you were up till now?

But you have to send me an email within 24 hours to invite me to meet you at the Murano restaurant. You are allowed to bring up to 3 friends along if you don't trust me (It should be the other way round) If I were to find you there would definitely be a confrontation with weapons classes not seen before. It will be disastrous for both of us given this . I can really damage you and your career. I can even damage your family. I will damage your friend Michael Wade Lee who is croaking up an opera in Birmingham, England right now. Eryn Pola is getting married soon to her boyfriend and since she was unjust and rude to me before that makes a lucrative high value target too. You are attempting to ruin my happiness, so let me ruin those of you, your family, your friends and in exchange. You will live through to release your single and music video on the internet----- at a huge cost to yourself and personal well being.

Your family lives at 531 Main Street, #213 New York, NY 10044
do they?

HOWEVER if you were to send me an invitation to meet with you without incident I will forget the last 2 weeks since I boarded and we can reconcile I promise. All I need is Don't f**k around with destiny Leandra. You are still a great girl with a lot going for you.

I will never forgive you for this slight Leandra. We will be at war with plenty of hurt on your side because you have hurt me enough already.

Hi Scott

I see no reasons why I should not contact you ever again-- because this mezzo soprano is going to be harassed till I get an apology and taht redneck child molesterDustin Bear the same as well or when she gets injured-- pictures and a youtube video will be sent to you. no one --friend or foe gets involved with Leandra Ramm gets involved with her. All I need is an apology from her-- she can then fuck off and not be friends with me. I don't give a damn.

Let this be known.. I come from the military-- whatever I say I will do. This CUNT will be dealt with.

Cyber-stalking Creepy crawlies

The internet allows the malicious to menace their victims

Apr 20th 2011 | from the print edition

LEANDRA RAMM (pictured) is a mezzo-soprano with more on her mind than music. Someone—a deranged Singaporean cyber-stalker, she claims—has posted around 4,000 internet messages in the past five years, depicting her as a talentless, sex-crazed swindler. He has also created a blog under her name and has left obscene messages on her own website.

Ms Ramm, who lives in New York, has had scant help from the American police, who say the offence is committed in Singapore. But she says the police in Singapore have shown no interest. Ms Ramm says her career, social life and emotional well-being have all suffered. Not only does she get daily death threats, but so do all those associated with her: friends, family, colleagues and boss. She says she feels “humiliated, helpless and abused”.

Police and prosecutors say that cyber-stalking—the persistent use of the internet, e-mail, social networks, instant messaging or related digital devices to annoy, harass or threaten—is growing, and that they lack the legal tools to combat it.

A study by the Bureau of Justice Statistics in America estimates that cyber-stalking afflicted around a quarter of the 3.4m stalking victims it has tallied over the age of 18 in the United States in 2006. Mike Proctor, a detective based in California with over 20 years of experience in dealing with stalking cases, says that more and more include internet harassment. He describes the crime as “woefully underprosecuted”. Barack Obama highlighted the issue in a Presidential Proclamation in December to mark Stalking Awareness Month. “Increasingly, stalkers use modern technology to monitor and torment their victims, and one in four victims reports some form of cyber-stalking—such as threatening e-mails or instant messaging—as part of their harassment,” it said.

Rachel MacKenzie, a psychologist who runs a behaviour programme for stalkers in the Australian state of Victoria, says that many now harass their victims through the internet. For some stalkers, the internet is just a tool of the trade. Others deploy it exclusively. But the victims of both kinds of stalker may be as frightened as those threatened physically. “There is always the fear that the stalking will enter the real world,” she says. In Germany a senior detective specialising in cybercrime in Frankfurt am Main, Birgit Roth, says that internet harassment is present in some 40% of stalking cases that her force investigates. She says that victims are as traumatised as the survivors of a plane crash.

The misery they inflict seems to motivate cyber-stalkers. A pregnant victim says she barricades herself in her home and has “morbid thoughts” every day: whether her child will be born or grow up without one of its parents. Her stalker, an ex-colleague with a military background, harasses her through social-networking sites, threatening physical attack on her family.

As with many internet crimes, the law is struggling to keep up. As Ms Ramm's case demonstrates, many stalkers threaten their victims from abroad, often from countries without stalking laws. American-based internet service providers (ISPs) and firms such as Google, Yahoo! and Facebook, require court orders for information about stalkers to be served in the country of their headquarters. That can be costly and time-consuming.

Nazir Afzal, an expert on stalking at Britain's Crown Prosecution Service, says such requests can mean delays of up to three months. A real-world

Tech-savvy sleuth fights for cybercrime victims

Specialist helps singer regain Internet identity

PITTSBURG — In a realm where international boundaries create barriers that help Internet criminals avoid prosecution, there's a fight going on to close these loopholes.

One of the battlefields, it turns out, is a nondescript three-room back office in Old Town Pittsburg.

It's nearly impossible to tell that there is a computer-laden nerve center nestled within, run by A.J. Fardella of Black Diamond Data.

The computer forensics expert specializes in mining systems for data and auditing their security, but his job has also taken on a crime-fighting component.

"I can tell if someone's lying through their computers," Fardella said.

That's where Leandra Ramm, an accomplished opera singer, enters the story. Ramm has spent the past six years in a virtual prison built by a stalker living in another hemisphere.

Fardella

In the United States, a quarter of the 3.4 million stalking victims recorded in 2006 — the most recent year for which statistics were available — were the targets of cyberstalking, according to the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics.

Harassing emails are involved in 83 percent of those cases. In Ramm's case, she received 4,917.

According to affidavits filed with authorities in Singapore, Ramm has been the victim of an online smear campaign by a man who became obsessed with her since watching a 2005 CNN appearance.

The man gained her trust, purporting to be a director for a Singapore music theater offering work for Ramm. But when his false promises were exposed by friends and colleagues, they along with Ramm saw an ugly side of the Internet they felt powerless to stop.

A series of websites tarnishing Ramm's reputation began popping up in Internet searches. The virtual assailant harassed Ramm, her friends and potential employers, who decided that signing her on was not worth the baggage that he had created for her.

"I was a liability," Ramm said. "They didn't want to deal with the stress and drama."

Ramm turned to authorities in New York — where she was living — and the FBI, all of whom considered themselves hamstrung by the suspected culprit being on the other side of the world. Earlier this year, The Economist, an international newsmagazine, wrote an item about her plight. But the man remained at large and untouched.

"The whole thing was a living nightmare," Ramm said. "Nothing could be done for years. These were dark times."

"I felt trapped in my own life, and everybody in my life was affected."

Through a chance connection, a mutual friend of Ramm and Fardella introduced the two this year and suggested he might be able to help her. Fardella, who has contracted work with the federal government including the Secret Service, immediately saw a lot he could do where others had failed by either lack of aptitude or thoroughness.

Fardella's office is a clash of high-end computer hardware and forensic tools — think "CSI" but swap laptops and desktops for dead bodies and shooting scenes — and a scattered collection of pop culture knickknacks, San Francisco Giants memorabilia, training certificates and photos of him with people ranging from Vice President Joseph Biden to rapper and actor Ice-T.

Then there are the piles and piles of backstage concert passes from his work as a stage manager and band technician, a calling from a previous life that included stints working for Journey and which he continues as a side pursuit.

Fardella is a known political figure in segments of the county, where he is a Pittsburg planning commissioner and has been active in school politics in the Mt. Diablo Unified School District, where his children attend school. Both roles, he says, attest to his passion for both his adopted home — he hails from San Francisco — and his children.

When he took on Ramm's case, he scanned the websites created to embarrass her. He pored through the nearly 5,000 emails and additional chat messages, creating a program that would meticulously examine and document his findings to preserve a chain of evidence.

What resulted was a massive packet of information Fardella shipped to the same Singapore investigators who had not responded to Ramm. It didn't hurt that Fardella tapped a Secret Service connection, which happens to have a training center in the strictly ruled city-state.

On July 21, Singapore police arrested Colin Mak Yew Loong and later released him while they continued their investigation, warning him to not make any contact with Ramm and at least four other people he's accused of terrorizing via the Internet.

Fardella took on the task of getting Loong prosecuted for two reasons: to free Ramm from his wrath and to call attention to the lack of mutual law-enforcement treaties between countries that he believes will become vital as crime migrates from the streets to the Web, which blurs international lines that bind existing police agencies.

"The lack of them is what took six years for action," he said.

Fardella also advocates that comprehensive computer training should become standard down to the beat officer level, to ensure consistency in tasks like preserving computer evidence.

"People have no idea. There has been a 900 percent increase in cyber-crime," he said, citing a figure from the 2009 Global Security Conference. "We need to nail down a structure because people can rip people off from the comfort of their computer."

Ramm, who for the past two years has performed on a cruise ship to keep working and regain her privacy, feels her life slowly falling back into place after finally getting some movement on her case.

The day she got word of Loong's arrest remains vivid in her mind.

"I'll never forget that day in a coffee shop in Greece. I've been waiting for that email for six years," she said. "And I haven't heard from him since. I have my life back."
